Subject: BP Oil Spill Hearings and Containment Efforts

June 18, 2010

Attention: Arizona Senator John McCain

We are seeing by recent television news reports that you are attempting to determine the circumstances surrounding the BP oil rig explosion, loss of life, and the oil spill containment and cleanup efforts. It should be realized by yourself and the committee that we claim the original conception of the significant intellectual materials involved in the formation of the basic principles of this and all oil well drilling improvement since 1953, although we have had no subsequent control over this intellectual property since my verbal conception with various individuals through a fifty five year approximate time period, individuals involved in receiving the intellectual materials were unfortunately only concerned about developing, selling, or using, these intellectual materials for their own financial gain and not concerned about being fair or equitable in regards to sharing their wealth or continuing a relationship that may have led to reduced R&D costs and potential accidents such as this one. Because of the nearly universal policy of these large companies to refuse to fairly partnership with their intellectual property conceivers, innovation retartive and inventor fraudulent company policies have evolved. Employers wish to either hire the inventor as part of a development team are subject to termination after the project is completed or send employees looking for ideas under fear of employment termination. Many are unwilling to pay for ideas under any circumstances and wish to assume that only engineers and scientists or other degreed professionals can invent or should be compensated for their ideas (although they only want to pay wages). My feeling after observing the progress occurring at the well site is that they have no persons associated with the project that are capable of inventing anything new at all. I believe there is likely stumbling blocks with missing technologies creating problems that they will be unable to solve (there is no one there that possesses the inventive faculties). Our correspondence attempts with regards to negotiating an equitable settlement for the use of our previous intellectual materials and the potential of creating new intellectual materials have apparently fallen on deaf ears. Clearly the possibility exists that these individuals should be forced to the negotiating table or have their assets seized for their refusal to deal in this situation. I have suggested to them a contest for the best direction for the containment and cleanup effort to take in order to ensure that all potential conceivers have the right to be compensated for their intellectual properties. From my perspective, we cannot participate unless payment is insured by the government or BP or a BP court sponsored account due to the tremendously negative odds of being paid associated with both the company's ability to use their employee's previous claims of inventions, claims of the existence of free donated inventions, and various of other types of reasons not to pay for inventions. Although we are uncertain the likely hood exists that the spill could have been contained long ago (will not accept any pressure to produce in the event that an agreement is reached) because we are free men working in a free society and not subject to becoming victims of a totalitarian judicial dictatorship. I suffered a recent massive heart attack a few years ago and have diabetes and I suspect that I have various tumors and surgical spinal degeneration so time is of the essence and I am not willing to become involved whatsoever in the instance of potential abuse. 205 years of fraudulently having my and my grandfather's inventions stolen have denied the world's greatest inventors their place in history and in many cases their financial rewards for their brilliant conceptions. It is time for these civil rights violations and murders to stop.

President Obama's squandering of nearly a trillion dollars of stimulus money without doing anything to stimulate the private sector economy through new unsatisfied consumer demand invention conception incentive funding by a top invention expert selection committee has caused continuing economic stagnation likely to continue indefinitely. The present R&D funding mentality will not generate new ideas capable of creating new business products, business methods, or services.

Sincerely,

Michael R. Thomas
