I saw your recent appearance on television with regards to a successful bounce back to profitability of Chrysler and GM. While you boast 1 million jobs saved, the reality is likely that reformed companies under bankruptcy could have accomplished the same thing as the demand for automobile increased due to the very predictable pent up demand. I wonder if individuals didn't begin withdrawing funds in order to create the necessity of these bankruptcies. The difficulty is when you reform these companies you cut myself out of the deal. With regards to Chrysler, this was my grandfathers company I believe and should have passed to me in his estate. There's also the issue of the money that Mercedes paid for Chrysler being mine from invention conception engineering work I did with Army Armstrong, the VP of Mercedes. There's also the issue of the non-payment for the intellectual property conception for Chrysler, GM, and all of the auto manufacturers with regards to all significant improvements on the automobile since 1953. I was glad to see that you like my new creation of the Chevy Volt electric vehicle. All I could think of is, you're driving a stolen car or at least one that would not exist without me. However it would be better if you were more concerned about the injustice associated with the non-payment for all of these invention conceptions. This certainly throws a monkey wrench into the concept of assisting these companies at any further endeavors, unless one of these companies or other companies cuts me in on the deal. Since it appears as though the gross corruption and fraud of the present and Leahy proposed patent system is as disgusting as ever and it appears as though you have no concern for ending the injustices or promoting my or your own new plans for progressive, not retartive, patent reform that you have been in complacency with. We've wasted a precious four years now seeing the results of big businesses desire to further corrupt and steal and violate the civil rights of inventors. It's time to dedicate new funds after squandering 1 billion in public funds on the piece of trash that deals nothing with the important issues and creates new methods of corruption. Clearly, the new patent reform should be developed by inventors in order to ensure that justice and their civil rights are not violated. Clearly your jobs bill in its present form will result in more squandering of public funds since it has no connection to fair and just patent reform and new unsatisfied demand consumer inventions are key to economic recovery in the private sector. We have artificially stimulated the housing and auto markets that have created long term economic recessions after the initial prosperity. Stimulating exports is also a key benefit in the necessity of fair patent reform. Hopefully this letter will not be in vane as usual. We also find that your lack of pressure on BP regarding hiring us has likely caused a full two thirds of the oil spilled in the Gulf to have occurred and furthermore; the assts of Atlantic Richfield might have also belonged to my grandfather and the responsible parties have formed a new company with 1 billion dollars of the proceeds using my intellectual materials to startup an offshore rig oil spill shutoff company. New equipment to further cleanup the spill has not been ordered by BP and unless you pressure them, it probably won't. Of course now that I have suggested it or conceived it you will probably also will allow it to be stolen by our corrupt patent system just like everything else. We really appreciated your stamped letter with regards to the BP spill, however; you failed to commend us for finally shutting the well off. You likely don't even know how we did this. In closing, please keep us in mind for all of your human advancement needs. Don't allow opposition tendencies to influence you away from the best directions to lead the country and allow your decisions to become less than optimally beneficial for the public good.

I see you're continuing to expand on my conceptions of alternative energy sources without concern about paying for anything that I've already conceived. I feel that you shouldn't forget about environmental cleanup and my new system of returnable containers will help to eliminate the necessity of my other invention, the clay line sanitary land fill. "I hope that I'll get paid for this one." What part of ripped off don't you understand.

I see that Gates and Buffet have convinced 50 other billionaires to give one half of their fortunes to charity. Yet so far they haven't contributed one thin dime to the individual or his relatives who are responsible for the creation of their wealth. Although I'm hopeful for some contributions or business partnerships, the likely hood is that funds that should have been mine in partnerships with them will now be invested in other partnerships that squander funds in comparison to human advancement that could have been accomplished. Most of them are only concerned about their social status and public perception and some are truly attempting to cover up the grossly sub-poverty line conditions that their ripped off business partner is forced to live in. Is there any justice in this country, or only injustice, then if you didn't like that, more injustice?

Keep us in mind for the creation of intellectual properties as long as people are willing to pay. It seems to me as if only thieves get paid in this country.

Thank you for your attention or lack of it concerning this important matter.

Sincerely,

Michael R. Thomas
